Employee Benefits

When starting a business in Sweden, there are several important factors to consider – one of them is offering a competitive employee benefits package.

To position yourself as an attractive employer, it's essential to understand which benefits are both expected and required by Swedish employees. In fact, more than 80% of the workforce in Sweden is covered by collective agreements, which often set the standard for benefits.

Property & Casualty – Managing Your International Risks

Legislation and market conditions in one country may differ significantly from legislations in other countries. This means that you need to understand the risks your company has in the markets in which you operate – and what options there are to secure them properly.
